The learning we hope students will acquire through IPE is not about memorising facts but about making sense of how to work effectively with others to benefit our patient, service users or clients and our communities. We want future practitioners to think more widely and reflectively within their spheres of practice ensuring effective communication in all its guises and ensuring a well informed general public who gain effective safe care or support. We want practitioners with the right skills and who can identify where to find these when they are in short supply and ensure their colleagues are up to date creating supportive team cultures. We want services to overcome barriers than prevent sensible changes to service design and delivery and may not require more resources to meet demand.
